The basic objective of this initiative is to use the tools of Information Technology to introduce best practices in procurement across Government Departments.

2. The benefits of eProcurement are demand aggregation, reduced inventory cost, consistent procurement procedures across the departments, reduction in cost of procurement, transparency, besides cost savings due to increased competition through reverse auctions etc. The project aims to create end to end procurement management, linking suppliers, departments and end-users. This will be achieved through creation of an eProcurement platform that would enable procurement of goods and services as well as work contracts.
